

'Jaws' cost donated

Jaws of Life rescue apparatus has been added to the Coaldale Fire Department's equipment through community efforts. Good public support of a Knights of Columbus benefit dance meant a cheque for more than $2,800, turned over recently to the fire department. Together with donations from the Kinsmen Club of Coaldale and profits from the Thrift Shop, the

Kinniburgh school on the bloc

By DAVE MABELL

TABER — What good is an empty rural school?
And how much insurance should be carried on it?
The question isn't academic: trustees here own a six-room country school with a duplex teacherage, and they've spent thousands to insure it as it's stood empty since the late 1970's.
But now they've decided to see if anyone else can find a use for the Kinniburgh School south of Purple Springs: it's officially up for sale.
The school's replacement value is $650,000, divisional secretary-treasurer Lyle Johnson says — but the school would have to burn down before the school board would ever see that sort of cash from the surplus property.

Even then, he points out, the board would have to rebuild — perhaps as an addition to another school, as no school reopening is planned at Kinniburgh — to collect on its insurance.
Of course, "If you take the insurance off, it will burn down three days later," he shrugs.
The school's main value in recent years has been as a storage site for surplus equipment. "We could have a heck of a garage sale" if the board manages to sell the school, says board chairman Lyn Kester.
Trustees, led by board deputy chairman Bill Penner, have revived an effort to sell the property even though earlier, informal efforts have failed. Most recent was a year ago, Johnson says.

Perhaps it's a matter of advertising, suggests Taber trustee Larry Van Orman. It could be billed, "10-acre Country Estate with Large Storage Shed."
Trustees will soon see. Tenders will be opened June 15.
But Johnson says removal of the school is not a viable option for the purchaser. All the school's plumbing and heating facilities are contained in its concrete pad; above the window-line is only a wooden frame shell.
Provincial authorities have given permission to dispose of the property, he says, and trustees are hoping their advertising will stir interest.

Artifacts on loan

FORT MACLEOD — The town has agreed to loan out its historical artifacts now that an agreement has been reached with the Fort Macleod Historical Society. The town had originally balked on an agreement which had indicated the loaned items could be kept permanently by the museum. Under the new agreement, the town could request its artifacts back with proper notification, said secretary-treasurer Lane McLaren.

Pass needs more office space

Herald Pass Bureau CROWNSNEST PASS — A local business woman who nearly gained rezoning approval here Tuesday, allowing commercial retail developments in a largely residential neighborhood, says she merely wants to create more office space in the area.
Four of 10 municipal aldermen voted against Kerr's proposed rezoning request after several local residents complained it could lead to deterioration of the residential neighborhood. As a result, the matter won't be brought up for final reading until the next municipal meeting.

Generally, the opponents were concerned about the broad uses allowed under the proposed zoning, fearing it could lead to construction of retail and restaurant outlets.

But in an interview Wednesday, Kerr said that's not her intention at all.
Previously, the property was used for office complexes, although it was zoned residential.
"When I bought the property I didn't realize it was zoned residential," she said. "To maintain it for office use I was told I'd have to apply for a commercial permit and pay $400...so that's what I did."

Kerr said she has no intention of developing store front businesses on the property.
"It was an office building, and that's what we bought it for," she said.

Days of mired trucks will come to an end

Herald Pass Bureau PINCHER CREEK — Many businessmen who want the town to continue garbage pick-ups here will have to construct asphalt or concrete pads beneath their bins by the end of summer.
Town officials this week approved a change in regulations to avoid the re-occurring problem associated with commercial bins becoming stuck in the mud.

additional costs the town passed new regulations ensuring a solid base is placed beneath each commercial bin.
If the improvements aren't made by next winter, garbage disposal will be discontinued, council decided.
In other town matters, council reluctantly decided to forward about $120,000 to the province for landscaping work at the new community hospital here.

Apparently, the large garbage bins sink in the muck with every thaw and freeze, common to this Chinook-belt area.
To avoid that problem and associated

Council earlier balked at the expenditure because it wasn't allowed to comment on how the area was to be improved. The Municipal District of Pincher Creek also is to pay a portion of the tab, determined by equalized assessment.
